Girl Scouts Western Oklahoma has named its 2024 Gold Award recipients. Olivia Martin of Moore is one of 13 Girl Scouts recognized for her outstanding leadership and community impact achieved through a hands-on project.

Martin's project, No Worries STEM, focused on planning and executing a robotics and STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering and Math) badge camp for Brownie, Junior and Cadette Girl Scouts at Science Museum Oklahoma.

A member of Troop 600, Martin identified a need, created a solution and came up with a plan. She collaborated with TEAM OKC Robotics to organize a robotics and STEM badge camp at Science Museum Oklahoma, aiming to address the lack of STEM activities for children and reduce anxiety associated with these subjects.

Through workshops and hands-on experiences, Martin empowered girls to earn robotics badges and engage in STEM learning. Her goal was to increase awareness and foster a positive attitude toward STEM fields.

Each year, hundreds of Girl Scouts across the country earn Gold Awards—the highest honor a Girl Scout can receive—through commitment to a service project.

“The Girl Scout Gold Award is the culmination of years of hard work and unwavering commitment to shaping a better future,” said GSWESTOK CEO Janienne Bella. “Gold Award Girl Scouts identify a problem and do whatever it takes to create positive change. By completing their service projects, Girls not only leave behind a lasting impact on their communities but also enter the next stage of their lives equipped with the confidence, experience and skills they need to make a difference.”

According to the Girl Scout Research Institute, Gold Award recipients are more likely than non-Girl Scouts to graduate from college, take on leadership roles and engage in community service activities.

Gold Award Girl Scouts are eligible for three unique scholarship opportunities: a $1,000 Sonic scholarship, a $3,000 GSWESTOK scholarship and a national $5,000 Girl Scouts of the USA scholarship.

Gold Award recipients, along with Bronze and Silver Award recipients, will be recognized at Girl Scouts Western Oklahoma’s Highest Awards Ceremony at 10 a.m. May 4 at Church of the Servant in Oklahoma City.
